Hamilton, ON – November 5, 2007 - All twelve tracks, written and produced by Orr, will be released online at no cost as DRM-free mp3s.

This self-produced, folk-rock album displays both ambition and obsession from the Canadian singer/songwriter. “The do-it-yourself method of making records is the only way that makes sense to me. No one else can capture the vision I have for a specific sound. There are something’s in art you just can’t communicate”, Scott explains. After months of juggling recording options with various producers and studios, Orr ended up taking the wheel himself. “People who work in the music industry make it out to be a dangerous proposition for an artist to ‘go it alone’ and write, produce, record and market a recording by oneself”, he says.

In the few short months since the general release, MILES FROM TODAY reached #26 on Amazon.com’s Top 50 Best Selling Singer-Songwriter Albums. The record was also featured in Soulshine Magazine, Miles of Music and received the praise of fans and music critiques from Canada, UK, US, Denmark, Netherlands and Germany! In September, MILES FROM TODAY was the most played record for a straight week on San Antonio’s Americana Roots Radio. And, just recently was nominated for 2 Hamilton Music Awards including; Alternative Country Album of the Year and Album Artwork of the Year!

“From as early as the beginning stages of writing and recording for this project, I had always intended on offering it for free in some capacity” explains Orr. “I make music for other people to enjoy and connect with. After it is recorded and released, it becomes property of the listener.” Orr’s not worried about the potential financial issues that might arise by giving away his primary commodity. “I want people to hear the record, it was made for them. I would hate for price to be the only obstacle keeping someone from enjoying the record.”
